Mr Duncan Marson

Senior Lecturer (Tourism), University of Derby, United Kingdom

Duncan Marson is a senior lecturer in tourism at the University of Derby. He is programme leader for the undergraduate degree in International Tourism Management, and teaches across a number of undergraduate and postgraduate subjects. He leads the undergraduate research modules across the disciplines in tourism, hospitality and events management. His research interests include adventure tourism and tourism pedagogy. He is currently completing a doctorate in radical risk taking in teaching and learning in tourism. In his free time, he can be found running, mountain biking and generally appreciating the beauty of the Peak District National Park.
